Roemer's Return.

Michael Roemer, "who was captured after a long and persistent chase," by a policeman, in a skiff, on Tuesday afternoon, was on his way to the city to surrender himself to his bondsmen, by the advice of George S. Withers, his attorney, who was in daily communication with him. There was no chase, no attempt to escape and no resistance, and so the great bravery, heroism and persistency of the police department, in this instance, falls very flat. The police, however, kept a very vigilant watch for Roemer, for which they deserve credit. It is claimed by Roemer's friends that the stabbing of Wm. B. Sicking was a clear case of self-defense, the accused being sixty-nine years of age, with hair as white as snowflakes.
